Brand New Book  Print on Demand .Excerpt from The Agrarian Law of Yucatan That the national aspiration is clearly summed up to-day in the conquest of the economic independence of the Mexican people, the only condition that will permit them to make free and happy homes. That riches concentrated in the hands of a few do not make any people happy and much less when the monopoly embraces the land, the only source of riches. That, fundamentally, the right to the land of certain people, when there are thousands that have been organized like a herd to till it, obtaining only the crumbs of production, is from every point of view iniquitous, and the greatest imposition that has existed in the world in order to sustain the chosen ones at the expense of the ignorant, inevitably spreading fanaticism among them. That before the universal destruction of all the religious systems and the commercial spirit in order to obtain the happiness of the people, there rises finally the clear conception that every man has the right to obtain by means of work that which signifies his well-being directly from natural sources; which means that every man has a right to a piece of land, in which by cultivation and by all the forms of work which modern economy teaches, he may obtain all that is necessary to sustain himself with a certain amount of comfort and with the opportunity to practice the social relations necessary for the elevation of his spirit gaining, in addition, certain means for economy for his old age, all of which signifies material welfare for his family, which is the foundation in general terms of the happiness of peoples. That...
